

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 10/14/2019 5:52:41 PM

First name: Susan

Last name: Roberts

Organization:

Title:

Comments: As a long-time resident of Wyoming, I remember the black-footed ferret as thought to be extinct. Then a few were found and a breeding program commenced to save a species. I oppose additional culling, trapping, poisoning, shooting, or otherwise eliminating the prairie dog populations in Thunder Basin National Grassland.

Wyoming has worked hard to save a species requiring healthy prairie dog populations as prey and food. National Grasslands are some of the only sites preserving such populations. Let the prairie dogs and ferrets live without human threats at this location.