Comments: As humans overwhelm the planet, and wildlife is coerced into smaller and smaller enclaves, it is critical that we preserve some large spaces for the natural world. Our descendants will curse us if we 'develop' every watershed on the planet. In my opinion, it is immoral for people to scavenge the entire planet for our selfish purposes.

Ergo, i adamantly oppose destructing roads into the now-roadless areas, and oppose timbering in these now-pristine places. Sanity requires that we leave as much land 'to itself' as possible. Saving the Tongass is possible, if greed is abjured.
