Comments: I choose 'no action' on this. In Alaska, it protects over 9 million acres on the Tongass, areas they depend on for fishing, hunting, recreating, climate regulation, and practicing their culture.

I was fortunate enough to spend two summers on POW and get to learn about the policy of place and aquatic and terrestrial ecology. The places that are already logged and have been logged in the past have not followed the rules especially how far down to the banks of a stream they can log. This effects salmon and ecosystem health. It can be detrimental to a place as beautiful as the Tongass. Please support No Action on the roadless rule.
