Comments: DO NOT exempt the Tongass National Forest from the 2001 roadless rule

Through this email I am registering that I do not agree with allowing logging and road building in Alaska's 16.7 million-acre Tongass National Forest.

The Roadless Rule finalized in 2001 protects the region's lucrative salmon fishery and tourism operations. The 2001 protection should remain unchanged.

There should be no development in the Tongass. The Tongass is critical habitat for wildlife and logging would remove trees that trap sediment and keep waterways cool.

Protect the Tongass.
