Comments: There are few places as important to leave roadless. The only people to benefit from changing the status of these currently roadless wild places are corporate executives and their cronies. And whoever has his/her hand in getting the deal done. There is plenty if science to support leaving these places alone.

Jobs can be created in other ways. Energy and resources need to be diversified AWAY from old growth Forests in particular. As an American, the thought of ruining one of our last truly pristine places is disgusting. And whoever makes this happen will be remembered accordingly.

Please think of something other than making a select few wealthy individuals who have the ear of the decision making body more wealthy at the expense of so much more than they can ever repay or give back to this great country.
