Comments: I understand the commenting rules that request sound evidence, but I would like to present good old fashioned common sense. It doesn't take a genius to understand that trees, wilderness and unpolluted waterways support our fragile ecosystem on this earth. Logging, fracking, over-fertilization or 'over-insectizing' cause real damage to our planet. Allowing significant logging roads and uncontrolled de-forestation in the Chugach National Forest would have a negative impact on the numerous bird, mammal and marine species, including the extensive shorebird habitat and bald eagle population. From a more bottom dollar perspective would include a potential impact on tourism for the area. No trees = no visitors, hikers, campers, etc, which equates to less revenue for our American Natives in the end. Let's support our Native Americans and their environment.
