Comments: The removal of Clinton's roadless rule will contribute to the destruction of our planet. The roots of the trees hold the soil together, therefore when they're demolished, the soil will erode and the nutrients won't stay in the soil. The biodiversity will be affected and since the food webs are interconnected, many species will be displaced and have to find another source of food. This policy only benefits the dying logging industry, but at the same time, will impact Alaska's only thriving commodity, salmon. I'm tired of old legislators making laws that will negatively impact future generations to pursue their own personal interests. Climate change is a real issue, and I'm tired of policies like the green new deal being put on the backburner so policies like this can be considered.
