Comments: Preserving old growth forests across the US is important not only for climate regulation, it is essential to the understanding of US and North American history. Logging in any old-growth forest will irreparably damage not only our air and land, but the way we see the world around us for thousands of years in the future.

As a result of this monumental weight of human and natural history kept in the trees themselves and the environment they are part of, no logging should be authorized in Alaskan National Forests or any other old growth stands.
