Comments: Dear Committee

Humankind has grown by the billions and will continue to do so. We humans are overwhelming the natural world that we are part of. The Alaska wilderness is such a natural place that has not yet been trashed by us. And I mean trashed in every sense of the word-from depositing our waste onto streams, fields and forests, to tearing up ecosystems to build houses, streets, towers and with it we bring noise, pollution and death to the animals and fauna.

I am against this. Leave something to nature and keep it in it's natural state. The US economy does not need this to survive. The economy needs less consumption and more conservation. Destroying the little that is left is a grave mistake and our children will never know how beautiful nature can be. All they will have is cars, pollution and trash.

The wildlife deserves a place in our world-we have brought to extinction so much and have crowded it out of most of our places due to greed and for our so called comfort that seems to be paramount to us.

I am totally against any further exploitation of the natural areas of America

Sincerely, Andrea Steegmayer
