Comments: Please select alternative 1 on the Alaska roadless rule.

The established roadless rule actively protects important habitats and wildlife on federal lands. Tongass National Forest, an old growth forest, would be irreparably damaged by allowing logging and other commercial activities.

We must do everything we can to protect our dwindling natural resources, environments, and wildlife. We must protect these habitats for future generations, for recreation, and for existing local economies. We must be good stewards of our remaining wild lands.

Sincerely,

Tim Dreyer
