

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 10/28/2019 8:00:00 AM

First name: Marilyn

Last name: Szydowski

Organization:

Title:

Comments: The Alaska Roadless Rule was put in place to protect wildlife, their habitat and the environment of Alaska for all generations and those to come. A full exemption of the Rule, which removes protections for 9.3 million roadless acres on Alaska's Tongass National Forest is egregious. Poorly thought out for the future of wilderness and a grab-for-privatization.

I strongly oppose this exemption. this exemption leads to threaten habitat for wildlife including grizzly bears, moose, and salmon, it also sets a bad precedent that could open up roadless areas in wild forests across the nation.

Once there is a road, there is no stopping big machinery and human traffic which is detrimental to wildlife. NO ROAD !!!

[Position]

[Position]