Comments: My love for the Crazy Mountains began in the early 1960s when I worked on a ranch in Big Timber. After a day in the saddle, I dreamed of their beauty, but I never dreamed that the Forest Service would ever swap prime public deer and elk and wild trout land and water up the Rock Creek drainage to Big Tobacco billionaires at Crazy Mountain Ranch for a pile of rocks and ice and a couple of stocked lakes. I strongly oppose trading our precious public hunting and fishing lands and waters to corporate CEOs who fly in from Richmond, Virginia, exploit Montana's heritage, and leave. We in Montana are the best care-takers of the last best place. Montana is not a "retreat" to us. (Tobacco CEOs also will probably throw their cigarette butts down in the forest and burn it up....)
