Comments: I urge the administration to not lift federal protections on the Tongass National Forest in Alaska for possible timber harvests and road construction. The Tongass National Forest is the largest national forest in the U.S and helps minimize the effects of climate change by acting as a carbon sink - sequestering carbon which is vitally important to curbing climate change effects. I urge the administration to think of the negative impacts of lifting this ban. It is important to not put economic profits before benefits to the people and the environment.
