Comments: I no longer hunt, hike, or fish due to my age and physical limitations but have followed the proposed land swap in the Crasies through the local paper. I must comment on the proposal. From what I read I must voice my disapproval to the proposal. It appears to me to be giving fine recreational land to wealthy landowners, who have already blocked access to existing trails, in exchange for land that does not have the same, fine recreational opportunities. The proposal appears to give away access to some fine fishing and hunting property in exchange for land no suitable for the same and lakes that will need to be stocked and will not support the fisheries. Why turn over 9 percent of Yellowstone Cutthroat trout stream habitat to the Phillip Morris International Corp. and lose the forest service's ability to manage it? Makes no sense. Another win for the wealthy and another loss for the public. Don't reroute the Porcupine Trail but make the landowners allow access through their property as was done in the past! Thanks for letting me comment on these proposals. Please don't let the big win over the small.
