Comments: As an American citizen I strongly urge all parties involved with the roadless rule project to choose option 1. Stripping the tongass forest of its beauty will only harm the local economy in Alaska, think about it, you would be destroying the natural habitats of hundreds of different species of animals and plants over time. Preserving the forest would also preserve the world class hunting, fishing and recreational activities that are equally important and beneficial to the local economy. You may not see it now but you could be directly responsible for the destruction of an untouched natural habitat. Please consider option 1
