Comments: No more logging in Tongass Forest

The Tongass National Forest has been placed in protected status due to its value as protected forest. It must stay wild. The U.S. Forest Service must prohibit additional development. Keep the wild, roadless lands, wild and roadless.

Choose "No Action" alternative on the Roadless Rule. The current administration is so completely corrupt and also out of touch with science. Due to climate change, all wild protected lands must stay wild and protected, so no more carbon is released. The Tongass National Forests pristine old growth forest is one of the last intact temperate rainforests on Earth. Logging would destroy this priceless habitat and it's biodiversity forever. The Tongass National Forest absorbs more carbon than all the other National forests put together.

The Tongass is home to protected wildlife including wolves, salmon, deer, bear, birds of prey, and many other species. The salmon populations will be threatened by new roads destroying streams. It also has within it's boundaries Native American peoples sacred sites. There is no justification nor documentation for the need for these roads or logging. Protections must stay in place.

I demand the Forest Service select no-action, Alternative 1.

Thank you,

Lisa Modola
