Comments: Choose alternative 1

Please choose alternative 1 on the Alaska roadless rule.

Do nothing and maintain the established Roadless Rule, established two decades ago, protects important fish and wildlife habitat on federal lands, protects drinking water, and protects recreation and business opportunities, all of which are crucial to Alaska's communities and economy. The proposed changes to the Roadless Rule will impact Alaska's Tongass National Forest which is an old growth forest that once lost cannot be replaced and cannot be mitigated by after the fact efforts. Changing or repealing this rule will lead only to environmental degradation in these vital forest ecosystems.

Sincerely

Jesse Dalton
