Comments: At what point will we finally realize that these forests cannot be replaced, the damage to the ecology cannot be undone, that we are failing as the stewards of the land? We cannot continue putting our financial interests ahead of protecting the land and environment that we must depend on to sustain. Moreover, it's our duty to ensure that our footprints don't result in irreparable damage for the next generations to come. Once we begin making exceptions to the measures that are designed to safeguard our national forests, its a proven certainty that other exceptions will follow as the rationale for justification continues to supersede the adverse consequences that will result. There are currently billions of dollars that the tax payers are being assessed for cleanup efforts associated with mining, fracking, oil drilling, etc. Despite all of the assurances that these enterprises must provide, none are truly held accountable for their devastating messes. Moreover, the government continues to clear the path for the expansion of these industries. How many more super funded waste areas must we anticipate before the government finally realizes that our home is becoming a major hazardous waste dump site? Indeed, deliberating over road access in a national forest may seem petty to the this administration, put considering their current track record, its not surprising. Therefore, if we, the people, don't remain vigil and protect our homelands and its inhabitants, maybe we'll reconsider when we join the endangered species list. Please don't allow the roads, protect our forests and our livelihood. Thank you for your time and consideration.
