Comments: My name is Joan Turpin and I live in Taylorsville, Utah.

After reading countless articles and reports on this proposed idea to rollback the roadless rules I am convinced that it would be a very bad idea for the environment and even worse for the wildlife in these areas that would be accessible if the rules are changed. These pristine areas are a big draw for tourists and a god send for the wildlife we are decimating in the lower 48 states and we don't need to change that for the worse, we need to work even harder to protect these places so we don't lose them forever. Stop the madness, NO roads!

I am writing to express strong opposition to efforts to roll back the Roadless Area Conservation Rule (Roadless Rule) in Alaska or elsewhere. The Roadless Rule was implemented with unprecedented public support to protect some of our nations most pristine public lands, including large parts of the Tongass National Forest. You must choose the No Action alternative. Any other choice would ignore overwhelming public support and harm Alaskans, including Alaska Natives, and taxpayers across the nation.

In Southeast Alaska, tourism accounts for 28% of employment and generate an annual $1 billion in economic benefit, making it far more of an economic driver than the timber industry, which is less than 1% of the regional economy.

Any choice but the No Action alternative would also put wildlife and critical habitat at risk, threaten access to clean water, and be a step in the wrong direction on climate change jeopardizing Alaskans at a time when the state already faces severe challenges related to rising temperatures. I urge you not to abandon the Roadless Rule in Alaska and instead to put the public interest above corporate profits by choosing to keep the rule in place unchanged.

Thank you for considering my comments.

Regards, Joan Turpin
