Comments: Fee permit comments

This whole proposal is nothing but another massive government overreach and I can only hope that the courts will shut it down since it is highly unlikely these comments against it will do any good. If the national parks can handle millions of visitors every year, why is this needed in these wilderness areas? Perhaps instead of limiting use of the limited trails available you could come up with better solutions for expanding new trails to provide more opportunities for public use of our public lands. There are all ready far too many fees in place for using public lands, the last thing needed is to add more and more layers of fees for people to enjoy the great outdoors. I am sure there are plenty of better ways to mitigate the trash and waste issues in the few areas that have been problematic without limiting use and charging more fees. But of course government beauracrats would rather line the agency's budget with more money to waste and then claim there still is not enough funds and continue the ongoing cycle of punishing those with limited means.
