My concern is how the trail fees work with the uncertainty of smoke-caused air pollution during the hiking season. You never know when there will be smoke from wildfires. With that uncertainty, I am tempted to pre-book a trail multiple times to have any reasonable chance of hiking it with good air quality and visibility. However, unless I can cancel as late as the day of the hike and get my money back, I certainly won't pre-book. I am then blocked out of hiking those special fee trails. This whole system of trail fees and limited numbers makes hiking too complicated.
