Comments: I lived year round in Southeast Alaska many years ago. I was stunned by the beauty of the vast, unbroken forests and horrified at the carnage of clear-cutting and rampant road building. There is no reason to allow further logging and road development in the Tongass National Forest but for sheer greed. Such activities can only degrade and even destroy this priceless resource, cause hardship to fisheries, and destroy cultural treasures. The last minute addition concerning the Chugach only shows potential for further destruction. No exemption for the Roadless Rule should be given any of this area for any reason, ever.
