Comments: Damage and destruction to our natural world has undeniable consequences. A recent Times editorial by Ms Sebastian and Ms Anderson about the proposed change to the roadless rule on Prince of Wales Island clearly articulates the struggle between greed and the preservation of sustainable activities.

It seems mindless that the USA is taking down dams and spending billions of dollars to restore salmon habitat while Alaska wants to harvest timber and minerals from the few viable habitats that remain for nurturing salmon.

Perhaps creating a fund for Alaska's politicians to give their constituencies is a better idea. Then there is very little support for this destructive behavior.
