Comments: Alaska Roadless

Dear review folks

This is a sad period in our nations history. Corporate stooges have managed to garner power from the presidency to Alaska's Governorship. Cut, kill, dig has become our official public lands policy.

I have made my living for over 50 years harvesting the abundance of our seas to feed people. 36 of those years in Alaska. I watched in the bad old days of pulp mill clear cuts as salmon streams were destroyed and natural habitats and communities of the wilderness were devastated by the greed of multi national corporations operating without regard for the indigenous peoples or the newer arrivals or the animal and plant communities of the Tongass Forest.

Now those stooges have conspired to once again return to clear cut the remains and take the money and run.

I represent but one more voice in the dissent from this treachery, and so i express my wish for alternate one. No change to the roadless rule.

Please expect rebellion if these proposed changes are instigated. We are deep in to the 6th great extinction and sane people have no alternative but resistance to the destruction of our planet. Acting locally the Tongass is my home and i will defend m home.

Sincerely, Spencer Severson
