

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 12/11/2019 9:00:00 AM

First name: Matt

Last name: Hayden

Organization:

Title:

Comments: I am wholeheartedly against the idea of removing the Roadless Rule from and increasing timber harvesting in the Tongass National Forest. There are precious few places like this left on our planet. It's true value far exceeds the small monetary gain that would benefit only a select FEW. The forest has priceless value in its potential to continue to benefit generations to come by reducing the effects of climate change and providing cleaner water and air and healthier ecosystems, AND in what it contributes to the various industries it supports, such as fishing and tourism, and the many people in those industries who depend on it. We are quick to criticize other nations for destroying their forests, like the Amazon. It's shameful, if not corrupt, and irresponsible to waste, harm, or destroy our own forests and resources for short term gain and to favor selfish politicians and industries.

[Position]