Dear Sonny Perdue,

I'm Bryan, a student from California who is visiting the Tongass National Forest in Alaska. After visiting the forest, I've realized the natural beauty of the National Forest. The streams provide a [illegible] for the salmon, the trees provide its shade. The salmon provide the trees nutrients. The forest also provides valuable trails for humans and tourists to walk on. Tourism and fishing, two of the greatest modern economic outputs of Alaska will be harmed by repealing the 2001 Roadless Rule. Tumber, the largest company for repealing the rule, focuses on the past. We should look past the immediate almost [illegible] benefits of [illegible] of the forest and look into what valuable resources and land that you will be losing. you never truly realize the value and magnitude of something until you lose it. Thus, let's think before u act and value and evaluate not only the pros but also the cons of losing the forest.

Thanks for reading

Bryan
