Comments: I oppose exceptions to the roadless rule. Ancient old growth Forests like these will not recover once logged and we do not need to log these forests for any reason other than simple greed. We already have sufficient logging resources in place and it would absolutely destroy some of the most incredible remaining forest. The wild and untapped nature/wilderness of america is what makes it great and we should start standing fast and really considering preserving what we have left for future generations. The ancient forest ecosystem and salmon fisheries depend on us to act as responsible stewards. Not every corner of our country has to be developed for resources and money.
