Comments: I'd rather suffer whatever minimal and nonexistent setbacks that come from this not happening, than to see:

*An incredible scenic and vital area of nature just to cut down some trees and provide some jobs.

*Disrespect the local indigenous people and their far greater contribution to this land than you will ever provide.

*A severe disregard of what approving this decision entails for everyone and everything else that relies on these forests.

At no point will the comparatively small number of jobs that this provides ever be worth the destruction this will wreak. If this is strictly for profit... then I'm sure there's no point to these messages, because you clearly don't care.

This land will be here long after you are gone, and will suffer through countless human lifetimes to ever reach what it is currently.
