Comments: Dear Forest Service,

Tongas Forest has long been a place of historic beauty, that should be protected for future generations. Native American ancestors lived here, meaning that the area has more value in history than any minerals that could be extracted from its land.

Conservation of our wild places are critical to the future. We have reached a place with the changing climate, that we must conserve pristine public lands at all cost. Removing the roadless rule would only benefit industry. It would destroy tourism, indigenous peoples home, and leave a devastating landscape for future generations.

With the decline in wildlife populations it only makes sense that we provide places like Tonga's National Forest.

Also it isn't right that few would profit off of Our Public Lands.

I ask that you protect and save this Sacred Land for Future Generations.

Larry Robinson
