Comments: Please push for the no-action option regarding this issue. Our old-growth forests are very rare anymore and represent a huge chance for research and for recreation. Without strictly monitoring and enforcing selective harvesting, we risk losing those forests, even if just a few lost trees lead to a destabilized ecosystem. Furthermore, there still exist other options! Let's begin creating, cultivating, and maintaining forests for logging. Well managed, old-growth hardwoods and such will do much better if they're cared for and culled as needed, and will produce a much more intentional product.
