Comments: Hey my names Kara. I'm sending this message today just as a simple reminder that money will always be temporary and materialistic, but the planet we live on is limited. No matter how rich you are it won't matter if you'll die from climate crisis. Now it sounds rash to say this, but it's necessary. The Tongass is the North American equivalent of the Amazon rainforest. Whereas Americans virtually have no part in saving the Amazon, maintaining the Tongass Rainforest is right up our alley. If you, whoever reads this, prioritizes money over the literal earth, the battle is already lost. Understand that if the American government chooses to exploit vulnerable parts of the earth that have never been exposed to human contact before, there is no going back. Regardless of your viewpoint on the climate crisis, have respect for the very ground you stand on. Without that respect, the very thing you say you care so much about will never survive you. Thank you for your time.
