

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 12/17/2019 9:00:00 AM

First name: Patricia

Last name: Stephens

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Trees have a remarkable capacity to store carbon, which helps to boost the planet's resilience to climate change. The Tongass holds 8 percent of all carbon stored in U.S. national forests, a service that would be jeopardized if logging resumed in the protected areas.

[Position]