

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 12/17/2019 9:00:00 AM

First name: Melissa

Last name: Cullum

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Overturning the Roadless Rule will do nothing but harm the environment, jeopardize an ecosystem and negatively impact tourism throughout Southeast Alaska. When logging was allowed years ago, it was a highly subsidized industry that cost more than just money, but resources as well. It left ugly swaths of land that has yet to recover. As an Alaskan who appreciates the beauty and wilderness of the Tongass, understand the important role it plays on a strong fishing industry and a place for my children to explore, I can't describe how opposed I am to lifting the Roadless Rule. It's reckless and shortsighted at best and completely destructive. It's time we stop stripping our resources for short term and marginal profits at the expense of others. Companies are only interested in the bottom line while Alaskans want more. The current governor, who is currently in the middle of a recall, does not represent the voice of Alaskans. It's time to start listening to those whose voices come from people, not corporations.

[Position]