Comments: I'm simply asking the Forest Service to do the right thing in this situation. To think outside of politics and short-sighted feats and look at the long-term implications of opening this pristine land to development. Please consider the long-term viability of Alaskan tourism and industry and its dependence on wildland. Do what's best for the people of Alaska for their remaining lives, not just the next couple of decades for specific industries. Make a decision that you'll be proud to tell your grandchildren and their children. Do the right thing and protect this land before the Forest Service falls down the dangerous, slippery slope as so many others have in the past.
