

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 12/15/2019 9:00:00 AM

First name: Lisa

Last name: Boragine

Organization: BORAGINE

Title:

Comments: Building roads in The Tongass National park is a tragic idea that hurts the American people. The Tongass is a carbon sink that is protecting us from climate change. There are trees there that are over 1,000 years old. They are a rich national heritage, and opening them to logging is a short term benefit for a long term loss. Doing a quick CBA on the loss of losing those trees versus the benefit that comes from protecting them demonstrates that the only people who benefit from logging those trees are quick buck corporate interests.

Building roads for logging means the roads are subsidized by the US Taxpayer and it should not happen.

[Position]