Comments: As a former Alaska resident, I am very concerned about any rollbacks of imperative protection of the Tongass National Forest. This forest sequesters a significant amount of carbon from the air and helps reduce the large amounts of carbon released by our human practices. The Tongass National Forest is a crucial part of the Alaskan ecosystem, the ecological damages from razing trees and building roads, will be devastating, this forest feeds many of the Alaskan ecosystems on top of producing oxygen. Logging 1000 year old trees is a major threat to the well being of the United States of America.
