Comments: Alaska Roadless Rule

Hello,

My name is Jenn Lawlor:

1. 20 year resident of Sitka, Alaska

2. Subsistence fisherwoman

3. Subsistence deer-hunter

4. Wilderness advocate

5. Wife to a wood artist who uses salvaged old-growth timber hand-logged from Roadless areas with permits obtained from the USFS

6. Canadian who watched her country destroy old-growth forests and lose their salmon industry (and so much else)

Nearly twenty years ago, my husband and I attended the USFS Roadless Rule commenting event at Centennial Hall here in Sitka where we commented in favor of the Roadless Rule.

Alaska's Roadless Rule was instituted in 2001 because it was overwhelmingly supported by the people.

Today, it continues to be the wish of the majority of Alaskans (and Americans!)-evident from the overwhelming outcrying of support for keeping Alaska's Roadless Rule intact.

I could go on and on about why we need to keep Alaska's Roadless Rule intact-from Climate Change to the health of the deer and salmon, but these things are obvious and have been said by so many others.

Do your job.

And listen to the people.

We want Alaska's Roadless Rule to remain intact.

Thank you for the opportunity to voice my opinion.
