It would be a crime to remove any protections afforded by the "Roadless Rule" for the Tongass National Forest, or any other protected National Forest. After centuries of logging and deforestation that has permanently changed the ecosystems and landscapes of our country, it would be extremely shortsighted to not preserve the limited amount of natural sanctuary that remains. Only 7% of the remaining US forests contain old growth. Do not sell out our national treasures.

Alternative 1 is the only option that I support.
