I have seen the impacts of hurricanes, droughts, and encroaching development on whitetail habitat. There are ~2% public lands in the State of Texas, and a small percentage of that is forest. National forests are a national treasure, an experience and obligation for care that is handed down generations. There is simply no need to develop oil/gas interests in the forest. We Texans can't even get to all of the deposits in the Permian basin. I absolutely reject the need to continue wildcatting in managed and virgin national forests. This is simply not in the public interest.Thank youChristopher StewartDripping Springs, TX and as often as possible at Bannister WMA
