Comments: The project documents are vague and do not provide substantive information as to location and exact activity. The environmental reports supporting the project assume best case scenarios, do not address many of the criteria in USFS guidance documents, and blithely discount possible impacts by relying upon references that are not scientifically defensible, and misrepresenting references. The public can not provide appropriate review of, and comment on, the project under the offered documents. The term "ecological restoration" used by the USFS is a smokescreen for unbridled logging of 1/5 of the public's Chattahoochee National Forest.
