Comments: I have some concerns, including the fact that you need to give the public site specific information before making a decision.

Additionally, adjacent land owners should be able to tell if the Forest Service is planning to spray herbicide in their backyard. My family has a farm in White County and sprays could be detrimental to our crops; we need more information about the effects your actions will have on our crops.
Mountain bike riders should be able to tell if they are planning to burn along their favorite trail.

There is the possibility that many other farmers will be affected, and I worry the Forest Watch may be sued for damages if crops and livestock are negatively affected.
