Comments: I am concerned for our forests in my home state of Georgia. I fear they are not being managed in such a way as to keep them intact and free of threats such as invasive species and unnecessary roads. Any activities that disturb the soil as tree cutting and roadbuilding do will lead to furthering the spread of invasive species in our forests. Fire ants are known to follow roads into otherwise fire ant free areas. Rather than disturbing an area by tree cutting or road building why not keep more of our state's forest land intact and use controlled burns as indicated to keep them healthy?
