Comments: Please do not wipe out Thunder Basin's prairie dogs! Our wildlife are continually and systematically being decimated for the good of ranchers and development. But mostly ranching interests, in Wyoming. How is it the black-footed ferret plan in TBNG can be overturned anyway? This is such an important area for so many species, not the least of which are prairie dogs and the extremely rare black-footed ferret. I've heard and read that prairie dogs are a keystone species that effects well over a hundred other animal and plant species. And there remains just a fraction of their original numbers in this state. We do far more damage than good in the name of livestock grazing, when it means killing the native wildlife and destroying habitat. Those of you in charge at the Forest Service should feel pretty small, letting ranchers tell you what to do. Leave the Grasslands Plan alone. Or do what's right for prairie dogs and every species that depends on them. Please!?
