Comments: First and foremost, these are public lands and the public should always have a voice in their fate. Furthermore, the few details provided about the government's plan for this land is not in the best interest of the people who enjoy these lands on a regular basis. However, our personal enjoyment is not the most alarming concern about this plan. This disruption to habitat and wildlife would be tragic. Logging, building roads and burning will not only immediately add to our CO2 emissions but will cease to be a pace that provides any carbon capture at all. We do not need to cut more trees, we need to plant more trees. This is a very serious proposal and will be met with resistance.
