Comments: I support USFS's attempts to plan for an integrated approach to land management, protecting biodiversity, providing recreation, preparing for climate disruption, and making judicious use of timber resources. I very strongly object, however, to these plans reducing opportunities for public input. Specific management actions should include ample opportunity for public input. This allows USFS to benefit from the wisdom of stakeholders who are not formally included in the planning process. It also underscores the fundamental rights of the public to comment on and guide the management of public lands. Please guarantee that public input will be included more fully in the final project.
