Comments: Eradicating the prairie dog population would have an astronomical impact on the endangered black footed ferret. Prairie dogs are a keystone species, meaning if they disappear, so many others will follow. It would be a death sentence to the bff population that has been brought back from the brink of extinction. Why allow history to repeat itself in such a negative way? The extraordinary effort that conservation teams have undertaken should be idolized, and continue to be a glorified example of what humans are capable of repairing. Please say no.
