Comments: 12 years ago, we invested our life savings into a home in which we wanted to live out our lives. We purchased 10 acres bordering 87,000 acres of national forest. After living in Atlanta since birth, it was our desire to be surrounded by the beauty and peace of the natural world. I don't understand how, as someone who made thoughtful decisions in good faith-with a substantial financial investment, and as a citizen whose tax dollars help to purchase and maintain public lands could/should be left out of the decision making process which could have a deep impact on our lives. This hardly seems fair, ethical, or "right."
