I work in a local motel and every year, I meet hunters from out-of state who come with their guns and an arsenal of ammunition to kill prairie dogs. They especially like to hunt them in the spring so they can kill the pregnant ones. When I ask for their motivation, it is always to save cows and horses from stepping in the holes and breaking their legs. I have yet to meet a rancher who has that problem. It appears to me that we have a lot of men in this country who have too many guns and nothing to shoot at. They drive here from places like Kentucky and stay for a week (at great expense) so they can kill something. I think it is sick and I tell them so.
