Comments: This Foothills Landscape Project is a huge project and I hope that it goes well. Our National Forests provide great opportunities for human beings to interact with Nature. I believe that our forests can teach us a lot about plant and animal lifecycles, the water and carbon cycles, and also teach how all these different systems interact. The predator and prey interactions can teach us much about why animals cannot be simply classified as "good" or "bad". Predators and prey alike are important to the forest, just like the forest is important to the animals. All the different parts of a forest are important to the healthy functioning of the forest. Human beings are an integral part of the forest. We manage the forest and we recreate on the forest. As long as this project improves the health of this Foothills landscape, its animals and plants, its water quality, I am all for it. Best of luck to the Forest Service!!!!
