Comments: I write this comment concerned about both the environmental effects this will have in the Chattahoochee National Forest and the effect it will have on people's trust in government organizations to do what's best for the people.
Will 60,000 acres of timber need to be harvested for anyone's good? Do 50,000 acres of burnt trees alleviate the situation you believe to be there?
How will the environment benefit from Mass removal of and herbicidal application on trees? And if the people never know that this is your plan-your intentions beside the point-why should they listen to you or trust you when you don't include their thoughts on the matter?

I know such a National Service would have factions inside itself, would it not? So surely they would not like an adversary who has no ties with them other than through disagreement on their policies and plans.
